workbooks by nigel shafran: Flowers For-- Nigel Shafran, 2008 Nigel Shafran's photographs are found within the frenetic pace and clutter of his domestic life. These small landscapes, each one a perfect balance of form and emotion, describe a familiar contemporary existence, yet they are always personal and often filled with love. This book is linked, in an informal way, to Ruthbook, a sequence of early pictures of his home life which he self-published in 1995. More than a decade later, the sense of continuity and growth adds to emotional significance of the photographs, but Shafran's aesthetic control and his use of the visually mundane results in realism rather than nostalgia. Each picture is evidence of his singular ability to find beauty in the most ordinary things. English text.

workbooks by nigel shafran: Dark Rooms , 2016 Nigel Shafran's new book takes five interconnected series of photographs and weaves them together with the common thread of domestic scenes. There is a constant sense of forward movement that is sometimes overt, as in the photographs of supermarket checkouts or underground escalators; sometimes implicit and more emotionally charged, as when the photographer faces the inventory of possessions in his mother's last house. But in each case these photographs deal as much with what has been left behind as with what lies ahead. They carry the inevitability of change and the psychological undertow of time passing moving forward.

workbooks by nigel shafran: The Domestic Stage Adam Murray, 2025-10-07 A bold interpretation of contemporary photography, this book explores the role of the domestic interior in fashion photography and its importance in defining a new kind of fashion image. Since the 1990s, fashion imagery has evolved from the aspirational and glamorous into an experimental genre created by interdisciplinary artists, art directors, and photographers. The domestic space or where we live has acquired a key role as an intimate setting for this kind of playful exploration, in which personal stories are told, and fashion shots gain authenticity. Illustrated interviews with or editorials on twenty-two established and newer image-makers offer exceptional insights into this phenomenon. Featured photographers include Corinne Day, Tierney Gearon, Clifford Prince King, and Tina Barney, to name a few. For three decades, the fashion image has shifted its focus from high-end shoots to the idiosyncratic, Instagram-style practice of pictures taken at home. That home may be a house, apartment, or room--often, though not always, the antithesis of glamour and gloss. The Domestic Stage captures this fascination with the home as an uncured setting for presenting an individual's private life and relationships, and for professional commissions with edge. How this space merged with the fashion image is revealed through the words and work of twenty-two such image-makers. They include the pioneering Nigel Shafran; International Magic, who created virtual fashion shows with Martine Rose during the pandemic; and Carrie Mae Weems, whose 2024 Bottega Veneta campaign truly came home--to show A$AP Rocky enjoying time with his children. Each contributor's commentary is candid and revealing, their images even more so. The result is a provocative new take on fashion photography and its transformation in recent years.
